1996 Census Profile

February, 1999

1996 Census of Canada, Statistics Canada

Clarkson-Lorne Park

History

Lorne Park originated from a resort area based at the southerly end of Lorne Park Road. The area was frequented by many tourists and impressive two and three story cottages reflected the affluent background of their owners. Lorne Park remained a cottage community until after World War II when permanent residents began to move in.

The first evidence of a village in Clarkson was around 1830 with farming and milling as the traditional occupations for the community. As the community became more established, "Clarkson Corners", at the railway and Clarkson Road became a stop commonly used during train travel between Toronto and Hamilton. The first general store and post office were established at this location by the Clarkson family.

The focus of development has shifted throughout the district over time. Stagecoach traffic along Clarkson Road between Dundas Street and Lakeshore Road influenced early settlement along that route. As rail transit became more popular, Clarkson Corners became a centre for the area.

Park Royal evolved in the 1950's and was referred to as the most pre-planned subdivision of its time. Progressive features of this area included buried service cables and its own sewer system in addition to planned school, recreation and commercial locations.

Many of the early structures are still present throughout the District. The Bradley House Museum, the Anchorage and the Benares House are a few of the historic buildings still present.
